DISABILITY STUDIES

Ryan Parrey (rparrey@ewu.edu), Program Director 233 Senior Hall 312.622.0195 program web page (https://www.ewu.edu/cpp/social-work/disabilitystudies/)

Disability Studies explores disability as a function of sociocultural theories and practices that privilege particular bodies over others, challenging the view of disability as an individual deficit that can be remedied through medical intervention or rehabilitation. Aligning itself with the disability rights and other social justice movements, Disability Studies promotes access, inclusion, and equity for all.

Eastern Washington University's Disability Studies (DSST) program offers an undergraduate certificate and minor in Disability Studies as well as a graduate certificate. Classes are available online as well as on campus. The DSST certificates and minor are ideal for students in the social sciences, humanities, and human services.

Undergraduate Program

Disability Studies is an interdisciplinary academic program involving multiple academic departments throughout the university. Administratively, it is located in the College of Professional Programs, School of Social Work, drawing students from multiple disciplines from every EWU college. It is offered in both traditional and online educational formats.

Disability Studies is a multidisciplinary field drawing from humanities and liberal arts, and from the social, physical, and natural sciences. Taught by faculty from multiple fields and disciplines, the Disability Studies program offers courses at both the undergraduate and graduate levels and educates students to develop an understanding of disability, disability culture, and people with disabilities as diverse and inclusive members of society.

The Disability Studies Certificate and Minor embrace disability as part of the tapestry of a diverse society. It highlights universal access the philosophy that responsible societies do not just accommodate minorities but are constructed for all people; majority and minority, typical and atypical. It acknowledges people's intersectionalities; that we each have multiple traits and characteristics. It utilizes critical diversity theory; that our diverse traits occur in social contexts, and opportunities are influenced by societal structures and policies. The program's emphasis on diversity, social justice, and universal access complements the university's mission to prepare its graduates to live and work in a diverse society, including disability advocacy and human rights work.

The online DSST program is tailored to people who work in disability advocacy, independent living, or human diversity fields who live throughout the US and internationally.

Graduate Program

The Disability Studies Graduate Certificate program embraces disability as part of the tapestry of a diverse society. It highlights universal access the philosophy that responsible societies do not just accommodate minorities but are constructed for all people; majority and minority, typical and atypical. It acknowledges people's intersectionalities; that we each have multiple traits and characteristics. It utilizes critical diversity theory; that our diverse traits occur in social contexts, and opportunities are influenced by societal structures and policies. The program's emphases on diversity, social justice, and universal access complement the university's mission to prepare its graduates to live and work in a diverse society, including disability advocacy and human rights work.

The Disability Studies Graduate Certificate program is offered in traditional and online formats and is designed for students living throughout the US and internationally. Matriculated graduate students are invited to enroll in Disability Studies courses. Post baccalaureate, non-matriculated students are required to follow university procedures to enroll in the Certificate Program.
